Nora had Black Hair according to her granddaughter, Phyllis Jeanne Gibbons. She left home at an early age because her stepmother, Mary Emmaline Utter was mean to her, beat her and told her she'd would skin her alive and hang her on a tree. Phyllis Jeanne Gibbons

When she visited Judge Utter, their table was overflowing.

Nora told her children they would never have to do housework because she had done so much when she was growing up.

Nora was reading at age 4 and was trying to protect her family from TB from Amy.
